County Chairmen Unite Support Of New Home For County

Frank R. Aulls and E. S. Underhill, Jr., Place Stamp of Approval on Referendum to Be Submitted Voters Next Tuesday—Claim it is a Non-partisan Matter to Correct "Deplorable" Condition.

When the leaders of both major political parties unite in endorsing a welfare project, it is strongly probable that the needed appropriation will be acted upon favorably by the voters of Steuben County. Add to this endorsement the fact that practically the entire press of the county favor the issue, and few voters should hesitate to cast their ballots in favor of the needed changes at the County Home.

Strange as it may seem, the chairmen of both the Republican and Democratic County Committees were agreed in recommending this referendum on the County Home to the voters of their respective parties. In a joint statement recently released for publication both leaders urged the voters to pass favorably upon the issue, which they maintain is non-partisan.

This statement signed by Supervisor Frank R. Aulls of Campbell, chairman of the Republican County Committee and by E. S. Underhill, Jr., of Corning, chairman of the Democratic County Committee points out particularly that the question is submitted solely from an advisory standpoint but that its approval would undoubtedly have the effect of stirring the supervisors to some prompt action for a complete and satisfactory solution of the County Home situation.

"The vote of the people of Steuben County on Election Day on the question of appropriating $160,000 for modernizing and making improvements at the County Home is solely advisory, for the decision remains with the Board of Supervisors.

"This question has nothing to do with partisan politics and is not an issue between two political parties.

"We believe, however, that the supervisors face a grave responsibility when making a decision on this matter, and we urge all the people of Steuben, regardless of party, to assist the supervisors by voting to create a modern, sanitary, fireproof and adequate home for those unfortunate individuals whose declining years are spent at the County Home.

"Practically all supervisors are agreed that many changes should be made at the Home. They disagree, however, on the amount. Twenty-two of the 38 supervisors have expressed themselves in favor of the $160,000 estimate of the architect, while the remaining 16 would appropriate lesser amounts, the average being about $100,000.

"A new jail is to be built in the neighborhood of the County Home and many of us believe that there should be a common sewage disposal plant, and central heating plant, for the jail and County Home, thus saving considerable capital expense.

"Some conditions at the County Home are both disgraceful and deplorable. We refer to the plumbing, overcrowding and fire-hazard and it is, we believe, the duty of the supervisors to remedy them at once.

"We, therefore, urge the people of Steuben County to vote favorably on the County Home question. While an adverse vote would not mean that the supervisors would permit present conditions to continue indefinitely we believe than an affirmation majority would have the effect of stirring them to more prompt action and some complete and satisfactory solution.

"Our statement does not mean that we are prepared to state that the supervisors should appropriate the entire amount of $160,000 but we do hope that the measure will carry on Election Day and that the supervisors will promptly take steps to eliminate the deplorable and disgraceful conditions that exist there.

Farm Bureau Drive To Increase Membership

The annual membership canvass of the Steuben County Farm Bureau was successfully launched in the meetings held at Hornell and Bath on the evenings of Thursday and Friday of last week. Both meetings were well attended and a spirit of optimism prevailed as to the outcome of the canvas. In commenting on the situation, Seymour Bridge of Fremont, president of the Bureau, who attended both meetings, stated that the Farm Bureau is making splendid growth and is performing notable service. "The Farm Bureau has a program for the betterment of conditions on every farm and in every farm community. The activities of this organization are benefitting every farmer of the county. We expect to continue to grow in numbers in order that we may render even greater service to agriculture".

C. O. DuBois, a representative of the New York State Farm Bureau Federation, addressed both gatherings. He stated that constructive thinking and action are responsible for what progress has been made in bettering agricultural conditions. even greater results may be obtained in the future with the continuation of this effort. More than anything else agriculture needs organization which will build and carry out good, sound economic programs, and that is the particular function of the Farm Bureau.

The Hornell meeting was held in the First Baptist Church. Singing was led by A. L. Blades with the assistance of Mrs. Cornell. Seymour Bridge presided. At the conclusion of the meeting Elwyn Swarts, captain of the west side team, urged the committeemen to make a thorough canvass and complete it as promptly as possible. Oil Drillers After Water

The oil well on the S. L. Perkins farm near Addison is now down 275 feet. Work has been temporarily suspended on the regular well and the drillers are at present busy putting down a well from which they hope to get water to use in their drilling operations.

Water is an important item in drilling wells, and must be had in quantities to keep the bottom of the drill hole wet. As there was no available water supply present at the Perkins farm, the drillers have been trucking water from Addison to keep the work going. This has proved to be a slow and expensive method of getting water, so the Arthurs Company decided to drill a well near the oil well to supply the want. Water was struck in the oil well at a depth of 150 feet, and the drillers expected to strike the vein at the same level with the new hole they are putting down a few feet to one side.

Up to late yesterday afternoon no water had been tapped, although the drill had penetrated 170 feet in the two days of drilling. The drilling company does not wish to put a shot down in this well because of the danger of caving in their main hole, so the only alternative seems to keep on drilling through the hard rock which is being penetrated.

Representatives of a number of oil companies are still combing the territory in search of unleased land. There seems to be considerable land in the vicinity of Jasper which has not yet been leased, and several farmers on the Goodhue are holding out to await developments. The very determination shown by the agents attempting to tie up more land, adds to the optimism of those expecting the Southern Tier will soon develop into a profitable oil field.

"We are a happy family," exclaims Mrs. Tuttle. "I met Charles Tuttle shortly after his graduation from Columbia University when he was just beginning the practise of law. We were married twenty-three years ago. We believe with the late Theodore Roosevelt in large families. There were five children in my mother's family. There are four in my own family."

Buffalo Men Jailed For Stealing Tires

Jasper, Oct. 27.—Raymond Stocking, who lives upstairs in the building adjoining the Wallace store, had a spare tire stolen from his car early last Saturday morning. Having a suspicion that the theft was committed by four men who had spent the greater part of the night in a parked car near by, Mr. Stocking gave chase and overtook them near South Canisteo. The men were arrested by Deputy Sheriff Roach and brought before Justice Bert Smith of Jasper. They gave their residence as Buffalo, three of them were boys, two being 17 years old and the other 18 years of age while the fourth member of the party gave his age as 26. After questioning them Mr. Smith sentenced the three boys to 30 days apiece in the Bath jail, and the oldest offender was given a sentence of 35 days.

IMPORTANCE OF ONE VOTE

By Rev. O. R. Miller

ONE VOTE. Some good men and women, when asked to register and vote on election day, say: "Oh, my one vote will not affect the election one way or the other; it won't matter whether I vote or not". But suppose 1,000 or 100,000 voters say the same thing, will not the result be affected?

ONE VOTE. A little over a thousand votes in New York State in 1884 decided whether Blaine or Cleveland should be President. Less than a thousand votes at a State Prohibition election in 1903 decided whether Vermont should be a wet or dry state for more than a dozen years, and it went wet because several thousand temperance people failed to vote. Many good luegislators have been elected or defeated by one vote.

ONE VOTE decided the election of Governor Morton of Massachusetts in 1839, thus defeating Edward Everett, the famous orator, statesman and scholar. One vote gave Texas to the United States. One vote made California a part of the Union, and thus turned the tide of immigration westward. One vote elected Oliver Cromwell to the famous "Long Parliament" and sent Charles I to the scaffold, revolutionized England, and made Great Britain free. One vote in the Electoral College in 1876 decided who should be President of the United States.

ONE VOTE, your one vote, therefore, may sometimes decide who shall be President of the United States, or who shall be Governor. Your vote may decide who shall be your United States Senator, State Senator or Assemblyman—to help make the laws of the State and Nation.

SERIES OF HEARINGS TO BE HELD BEFORE REVIEWING STATE TAX LAWS

A series of hearings before the State Commission to revise the tax laws, which will afford an opportunity to persons in all sections of the state to register their criticisms of the existing system of state and local taxation and their suggestions for its modification, was announced today by Senator Seabury C. Mastick, Chiarman of the Commission. In making this announcement Senator Mastick said:

Since the date of its organization early in September the New York State Commission for the Revision of the Tax Laws has been making a diligent study of the problem which the Legislature has placed before it for solution. It has now completed a preliminary review of that problem and has organized a technical staff to assist it in gathering and analysing the pertinent data. The Commission now desires to hear the people of the state in order that it may proceed with its task with as complete as possible a knowledge of the wishes and desires of those who pay the taxes in support of our state and local government.

"Under the terms of the law establishing the Commission, we are given power to hold public hearings and are directed to give opportunity 'to any New York organization having tangible interest in New York State or any corporate or individual taxpayer to present for consideration suggestions' bearing on the work of the Commission.

"The Commission consequently desires to invite everyone interested to submit their criticisms and suggestions either in the form of written statements or briefs or in the form of oral statements before the Commission. In order to give an opportunity for personal conferences before the Commission a series of public hearings have been scheduled for 10 A. M. at the following places:

November 6—Syracuse, Council Chamber, City Hall.

November 7—Binghamton, Council Chamber, City Hall.

November 10—Rochester, Supervisors Room, Court House.

November 11—Buffalo, Fillmore Room, Hitel Statler.

November 18—Albany, Senate Chamber, State Capitol.

November 19—New York City, Bar Association Building, 42 West 44th Street.

Inquiries respecting appearances before the Commission may be addressed to the executive secretary, Prof. Robert Murray Haig, 607 School of Business, Columbia University.

"The Commission is seeking to comply with the provision of the statute which directs it to 'provide for New York State a system of taxation which shall reasonably distribute the tax burden as widely and evenly as possible and thereby relieve those present sources of revenue, particularly real estate, which now bear a disproportionate part of the whole tax burden of the state'. The Commission will be particularly interested to receive data bearing upon the question as to the sources of revenue which should be utilized to provide the funds necessary to give real estate and other sources which may be bearing a disproportionate part of the tax burden the degree of relief which is considered desirable. Among the specific suggestions which have already been submitted to the Commission have been proposals (1) to develop the State Personal Income Tax so as to yield large additional sums, and (2) to establish a system of consumption or sales taxes to meet this situation. The Commissioner has also been urged to change the basis of the present Franchise Tax on corporations from net income to another basis which approaches the character of a sales or production tax. The Commission would like to hear the views of the taxpayers of the state regarding these proposals and any others which are pertinent to its field of inquiry."

ELECT MR. STALKER

There is no question in the minds of Republican voters this fall that they must pull together and elect every congressman coming up on the ticket. A serious loss of seats in the next Congress, while it might not give a Democratic majority, would never-the-less considerably embarrass President Hoover. Thoughout the year and a half of his tenure of office, Mr. Hoover has been troubled at many different times by insurgent senators combining forces with Democratic senators to defeat legislation which the executive particularly wanted passed. While there is little chance that enough congressional seats could be lost to the Democratic party to give it a working majority this year, still, it behooves the Republicans in every district to see that Mr. Hoover is given as large and loyal support as possible.

The Republican candidate for re-election from this district, Hon. Gale H. Stalker, has served his constituents well throughout his term as a member of Congress. Mr. Stalker deserves the whole-hearted support of every Republican voter in the district, to return him to the work he has been doing so well. He has been in the lower house long enough now, so that he has gained a great deal of influence among is members. His clear cut stand on all important issues has gained Mr. Stalker fine prestige with the administration. Be sure to cast a vote next Tuesday for Gale H. Stalker, our honest, efficient congressman.

HALLOWE'EN

Hallowe'en—the eve of All Hollow, as the old English term goes, All Saints Day in the church calendars—has long been regarded in the folklore of northern Europe as the night when witches turn out in force and the powers of magic are loosed in the land.

The superstition seems to have its root in the idea that on All Saints Day the powers of evil must take an enforced vacation. They must muster strength to cope with a singe saint, but not with all of them. So the night of October 31 is a witches' frolic, up to the stroke of midnight, and those who would invoke the aid of supernatural beings to shape or foretell the future, or who would pacify them, can call upon them on Hallowe'en with a surer certainty of response than on any other night of the year.

Doubtless among some of the primitive peasantry of Europe there still persists a genuine belief in the power of witches to do actual harm. We know that there are American communities of foreign stock in which the belief in witchcraft is still prevalent and active. But to the general run of Americans Hallowe'en is not a night of terror but rather one of jollity, for the young folks seeking and half believing in the disclosures of the mirror in the dark or the shape of the apple-peel cast over the left shoulder.

Every section, we were going to say every community, has its own special tradition for the celebration of Hallowe'en. It used to be much more the excuse for mischievous boys to lift gates from their hinges, hang "tick-tacks" at windows and otherwise raise cain in ways only small boys can invent, than it is now. Hallowe'en nowadays is more of an excuse for giving a party, with or without the ancient custom of "bobbing" for apples in a tub of water or walking backward down the cellar stairs holding a lighted candle in one hand and a mirror in the other in which the face of the lucky girl's future husband may be discerned.

THIS IS A GREAT COUNTRY

The canning season in the North is over; the fruits and vegetables have been put up for the winter, the cellar windows have been banked up, the green corn is in the silo and the hay in the barn or fodder stack. Apple-picking is about finished. There is still some corn-husking to be done, and then the fall plowing to be finished, but the heavy part of the farm work is over for the year.

In the South the profitable part of the farm year is just beginning. In Florida the celery growers are setting out the plants which they started in their seedbeds during the summer, while the tomato and pepper crops are just getting under way for fall and winter shipment. Strawberries will be ripe around Plant City by New Year's Day, perhaps a little earlier. And the early oranges are just getting to market.

Up in Maine the potatoes have been dug and stored in the pits against shipping time, and the farmers are overhauling their bobsleds and snowplows. In Pasadena they are getting the rose trees into shape for the mid-winter carnival. On both sides of Ol' Man River the colored cotton-pickers of Mississippi and Louisiana are at the height of their task. Along the upper reaches of the same stream the young folks of Minnesota and Wisconsin are thinking of sharpening their skates for the hockey season.

This is a great country.

BUY NOW

Philadelphia deserves credit for initiating the "Buy Now" movement, which is being taken up by Chambers of Commerce all over the United States.

It is sound advice. If everybody would act upon it, business would pick up rapidly.

Everybody needs something. Many are holding off their purchases hoping for better times. So long as they continue to hold off, business will not improve. The way to make business better for everybody is to buy now.

That does not mean merely "do your Christmas shopping early", though that advice, always sound, is sounder than ever this year. It means going ahead with the purchases you would like to make but have been hesitating about making.

If everybody, or even half of the people of the United States were to act on this advice and buy now, the backbone of the business depression would be broken. That does not mean that the return of prosperity would be instant, but it would be greatly hastened.

Every retail purchase not only depletes the merchant's stock, making it necessary for him to order new goods, but it puts money or credit in the merchant's pocket with which to pay for the new goods he orders. His order in turn, added to those of other retailers, has the same effect upon the wholesaler and distributor, and those in turn, go back to the mills for their fresh stock.

Your dollar, once passed across the merchant's counter, will thus do its share toward increasing factory payrolls. Prosperity can only be restored by putting dollars into circulation—your dollars and your neighbor's dollars.

"Buy now", is a good slogan.

THE FARM BOARD IS LEARNING

The Federal Farm Board has had about sixteen months of experience in its work of administrating the Cooperative Marketing Law. Its members have learned a great deal in that time. In the beginning they were new on the job. Only one of them, Chairman Legge, had had anything which might be called national experience in agricultural problems. The others were able enough men, but their individual experience was limited to territorial activities or to the marketing of certain commodities.

There is evidence that the Farm Board members are acquiring a national point of view, and that they have discovered several fundamental facts, concerning which there seemed at the beginning to be some doubt among the Board members. Those facts, as stated by Mr. Teague in a recent address, are:

Agricultural problems will not be solved by legislation.

The law of supply and demand cannot be ignored.

The greatest assistance to agriculture by the Government will be the gradual development of grower-owned marketing system.

Now that the Farm Board has learned those things, and we have Mr. Teague's word for it that all of the members now accept them as truth, there is hope that more rapid progress may be made in bringing agricultural marketing to a point where the growers really get what their products are worth.

The Way of Life
By BRUCE BARTON

You've Got To Give Them Time

A woman whose son is in his second year at college writes that her boy is well mannered and intelligent but does not seem to have any objective.

"His father and I urge him to decide what he wants to do in life," she says, "but he tells us that he can not make up his mind."

For the encouragement of this mother I can cite two interesting cases.

A certain man now stands near the top of his profession, with an income considerably in excess of a hundred thousand dollars a year. He worked hard in college, but his health was poor; he was frequently despondent, and at his graduation he felt that he was not trained for anything.

He took the first job offered, and made surprisingly good progress. Just about the time that his parents thought he was well established, he suddenly chucked the job and started around the world. After a year's travel, which used up all his savings, he started in another position. The company failed, and he was out again. A third time he started in a different line, but it did not interest him. He could not get to first base.

On his fourth attempt, when he was almost thirty years old, he finally found work that gripped him. Also, he became engaged to be married. He jumped into high speed and has been successful ever since.

I know another man whose ability was clearly recognized by the heads of the big company where he worked, but somehow they could not seem to fit him into the place where he would be really productive. Four or five times they shifted him into different departments. They were just about to turn him into the street when he struck the one thing for which he was really fitted. Today he is vice president of the whole concern.

When I buy an automobile the salesman tells me that it has been perfectly manufactured for its work, and carefully inspected and tuned up. At the same time, he says that I must be patient with it. For the first two thousand miles I must run it slowly, and I must bring it in often and have it adjusted.

We expect this in an automobile. But in a youngster we have the notion that the factory—which is the scchool or college—ought to turn him out all ready for a championship race at high speed.

It takes a lot of wisdom and patience to be the father of a boy who is starting in life. Boys must have a chance to get adjusted. You've got to give them time.

Sunday School Lesson

Jesus had been the teacher of Peter in his early teens the work would have been less difficult and more resultful. Adults who are making serious mistakes will find much help in this study of Peter. Believe another saying and take courage: "It is never too late to mend."

Observe three distinct calls that came to Peter from Jesus. The first, when brought by Andrew his brother, was to become a friend of the Master. Then there was the invitation to go to school as a disciple (learner.) Later twelve apostles were chosen from among the disciples and Peter was selected. After Jesus had been rejected by the multitude, because He would not become their bread-making king the traveling school was taken to the base of Mount Hermon. Here there was a special quiz class as the Teacher said "Whom do men say that I am?" While the others were still thinking Peter gave the right answer: "Thou art the Christ." For this right reply the pupil was especially commended.

International Sunday School Lesson for November 2

SIMON PETER—FROM WEAKNESS TO STRENGTH

Mark 8:27-29; Luke 22-31-34; John 18:25-27; 21:15-17.

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

Peter was the popular one among the twelve apostles. More is known about his life than any other and, in part, this is because he was the frequent spokesman. He was invariably human and because he made so many mistakes we find comfort in studying his life.

It is significant that problems arose for Peter as an adult. It is much easier to develop a worthy character when the task is entered upon in childhood. Here we have the training of an adult and the slogan is still true. "It is hard to teach an old dog new tricks." If

A slippery concrete feeding floor is undesirable for livestock. A rough surface that will give a good foothold can easily be provided when making the floor by sliding a straight-edge along the side forms with a sawlike motion and "jigging" it up and down. Do this while the concrete is fairly soft. Another way is to roughen the surface with a stiff broom after the concrete has set sufficiently.

Modern machinery is more efficient in large fields. Possibly the tearing out of a couple of fences this winter may help on your farm. Cornell Extension Bulletin E 55 on planning the farm layout will help. Ask the office of publication at the New York State College of Agriculture for a copy. It is free.

The Scrap Book

A STRIP OF BLUE

By Lucy Larcom

I do not own an inch of land,
  But all I see is mine,—
The orchards and the mowing-fields,
  The lawns and gardens fine.
The winds my tax-collectors are,
  They bring me tithes divine,—
Wild scents and subtle essences,
  A tribute rare and free;
And, more magnificent than all,
  My window keeps for me
A glimpse of blue immensity,—
  A little strip of sea.

Richer am I than he who owns
  Great fleets and argosies;
I have a share in every ship
  Won by the inland breeze
To loiter on yon airy road
  Above the apple-trees.
I freight them with my untold dreams;
  Each bears my own picked crew;
And nobler cargoes wait for them
  Than ever India knew,—
My ships that sail into the East
  Across that outlet blue.

Here sit I, as a little child:
  The threshold of God's door
Is that clear band of chrysoprase;
  Now the vast temple floor,
The blinding glory of the dome
  I bow my head before:
Thy universe, O God, is home,
  In height or depth, to me;
Yet here upon thy footstool green
  Content am I to be;
Glad, when is opened unto my need
  Some sea-like glimpse of thee.

FAMILY NEEDS GOOD LIGHTING

Adds to Health and Comfort— Fixtures Should Suit Purpose.

Proper lighting in the home adds to the comfort and convenience of the whole family, particularly during the winter, and the test of good lighting is the degree of eye comfort obtained.

Health and comfort as well as appearance should be considered in choosing lamps and electric fixtures, says the New York State College of Home Economics. For both beauty and comfort all lighting arrangement should conceal the source of light. Shades on lamps should be large enough to cover the bulb and to protect the eyes from the glare. Fixtures may be too elaborate for the rest of the furnishings; as a rule, then, simplicity is the keynote of good fixture design.

The best lights are planned to suit the purpose they are to serve. For special work, such as cooking, white light generally diffused about the room to prevent shadows is recommended. For reading or writing, both diffused and concentrated lights are recommended. using only bright lights for reading or sewing means that the eyes may be strained by the contrast between the bright spot and the surrounding darkness. Two lights, one concentrated and one for general illumination, are best.

Lights should be suited to the different parts of the house. In the entrance hall an overhead fixture or a portable lamp by a mirror is most suitable. Because the living room is used for various activities requiring both bright and restful light, both overhead and low lights are useful. In the dining room where the table is the center of interest a center light directed on the table but adjusted to avoid the eyes of persons seated is best.

FALL CLEAN - UP HELPS FLOWERS

A fall clean-up of beds and borders will lessen the destructiveness of many common diseases, advises Professor L. M. Massey of the New York State College of Agriculture. Some of these diseases are: peony blight that so frequently kills stems and blasts buds; iris leaf spot which disfigures and later kills the leaves; phlox leaf spot which leaves the plants brown or naked of leaves halfway from the ground before the blossoming, and mildew which makes great patches of white growth on the leaves and may ruin the flowers; and hollyhock rust which disfigures the leaves, causing yellowing, and may be severe enough to kill the plants. All herbaceous perennials will have less infection next season if the old plant parts are distroyed this fall, he says.

ESKIMOS

Traders returning from the Hudson's Bay country tell of Eskimo families whose incomes in actual money run up to $40,000 a year, which they earn by trapping the rare white fox for its fur. These Eskimos, like all other uncultured people who come into possession of sudden wealth, have no idea of the value of money. They spend their incomes on airplane joyrides, commercial aviators having discovered that there is easy money in flying up to Herschel Island, in the Arctic ocean, where these Eskimos live, and charging them $375 for a flight to Edmonton. They pay $300 a ton for coal with which to heat their igloos, buy the most expensive radio sets, and arouse the envy of their less fortunate neighbors.

Some moralists are inclined to criticise these Eskimos for their lack of thrift, but it seems to me as if they were getting more out of life than many persons who save their pennies and deny themselves anything in the way of luxury.

WINE

It is not illegal, the Director of Prohibition declares, to make wine or beer in one's own home for one's own use. The law does not prohibit the making of beverages which are not "intoxicating in fact," but prohibits their sale.

It does not take a very long memory to recall the time when the domestic manufacture of wine for home use was a part of the year's regular routine in a large proportion of farm and village homes. Elderberry wine, dandelion wine and wine from other fruits and ingredients shared honors with the grape. And our grandmothers always took pains to see that there was a supply on hand of "blackberry cordial," which was supposed to have sovereign value in digestive disturbances. Probably blackberry cordial would come under the prohibition ban today, for it certainly was "intoxicating in fact." But one needed a capacity far beyond the ordinary to consume enough of the old-fashioned home-made wines to become intoxicated by them.

ST. BERNARD

In ordering Italian border guards to fire on the monks of St. Bernard when they crossed the Italian border to rescue some snowbound travelers, the Fascist government outraged the humane sensibilities of the whole world. The Hospice and monastery of St. Bernard, founded in the year 926 by Bernard de Menthon, is more than a Swiss institution; it is enshrined in the heart of the whole Christian world.

Who has not heard of the men who give their lives to save others, as these monks have done for a thousand years? Situated 8,120 feet above sea-level, at the summit of the oldest-travelled pass across the Alps, the Hospice is a refuge for travellers—though motorists are not especially welcome—and the home of the famous St. Bernard dogs. These great creatures, standing three feet tall, are a breed especially developed by the monks, with thick hair to withstand the cold, keen noses to smell stray travellers caught in the snowstorms, and great strength to drag them to safety or run swiftly for aid.

More than 20,000 persons every year spend the night at the Hospice. No charge is made, but everybody is supposed to contribute the price of a night's lodging to the little church there.

HELIUM

Instead of being a rare gas, obtainable only at a high cost, as it was a few years ago, helium, the lightest of all the elements except hydrogen, is now obtained in practically unlimited quantities from the Government-owned gas wells in Texas and Oklahoma.

A movement has been started to induce the President and the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to permit the exportation of helium gas for use in commercial airships in other countries. Nothing could do more to aid in the development of dirigibles, and such an action on the part of our officials would go far toward better international relations. But the probabilities are that the advocates of war and the timorous ones who think the rest of the world is lying in wait to pounce upon the United States, will make a vigorous protest against letting any other nation have something which might be used in making war upon us.

HEAT

The newest vision of science is a substance which will take the place of steam for heating purposes. Diphenyl, a substance obtained from benzine, is said by the American Institute of Chemical Engineers to be much better for this purpose. It is a solid which melts at a temperature of 157 degrees and vaporizes at 492 degrees.

A house heating plant using diphenyl would have boiler and pipes full of this solid, which would gradually become liquid as the fire was started, and would circulate through pipes and radiators like water. It holds heat better than steam, and is said to give off more of the heat from the boiler furnace than steam does.

Child Specialist to Discuss Behavior Problems

New ways of solving behavior problems of young children to aid them in wholesome successful development will be discussed by Dr. Margaret Wylie, child guidance specialist from the State College of Home Economics at Cornell University who will speak to mothers interested in child study at Hornell Library on November 6 at 2 o'clock.

Because so much is known today about the causes of the child's behavior parents can avoid unhappy mistakes in dealing with their children. Dr. Wylie will discuss the reasons for problems in behavior, the types of problems that generally arise with children and ways to deal with them. She will discuss the physical, intellectual, emotional and social causes that lead to difficulties and show how these may be solved.

Dr. Margaret Wylie has returned to Cornell this fall, after three years' absence to continue the child guidance extension program which she organized in 1925 and which has increased each year because of the great interest of parents all over the state, in the subject. In the first year of the work an extensive program was carried on in three counties; last year, just four years later, thirty-four counties were enrolled in the work.

Dr. Wylie comes back to New York State from the University of Michigan, where she was a member of the psychology department. Her training and experience with children in the field of psychology has been unusually broad. During the war she served as a psychologist with the United States Health Department. Later she entered juvenile court work where her work was especially concerned with successful habit training. Later she carried on a study of refusal behavior of preschool children in three nursery schools in Chicago, working with the Chicago Institute for Juvenile Research.

IS THERE NO ONE WHO CARES?

NOT ALL THEORY IN POULTRY COURSES

Free Short Course Students Care for Flock, Incubators, Brood Chicks, and then Hear Lectures.

If the theory is correct that people learn most by actually doing, the Cornell short course students who choose poultry should profit, judging from the explanation of the courses given by F. E. Andrews of the New York State College of Agriculture.

The courses start November 5 and end February 13. The students soon find that poultry keeping is not just feeding the hens and gathering the eggs he says. For twelve weeks classes begin at eight o'clock in the morning and last until from four to six in the afternoon for five days of the week. But since the hens are not unionized and each student has a flock in his care, some added work comes on Saturday and Sunday.

Each student is assigned a flock of hens for four weeks and he is responsible for their care and management. He keeps daily records of the feed, the eggs, the temperature and condition of the flock. Next each student operates a compartment in an incubator and makes a record of loss in weight of the eggs, the variation of temperature and other factors affecting the hatch. The incubators are of four different types, including electric and hot-water-heated machines of both cabinet and sectional types.

In the brooder practice course the student feeds a flock of chicks, and operates a brooder stove and house under practical conditions. He also has the opportunity to operate a battery brooder, one of the recent developments in brooding chicks.

During the laboratory periods of another course, poultry is killed, dry picked and scald picked, and prepared for the wholesale and retail markets. Some judging is done to become familiar with standard breeds of poultry, age and sex determination, and the production ability. Eggs are candled, graded and packed; rations studied; diseases and post mortem explained; caponizing practiced; reading blue prints; poultry houses designed; and other operations discussed.

In addition to actual practice, the students attend a series of seventy-two lectures, one each day, touching various phases of the poultry industry. Nearly every member of the teaching staff of the poultry department helps with this course. Students who choose the course in marketing poultry spend three days on the New York City markets, immediately following the Christmas vacation.

Always leave at least an inch of the stem ends on beets when cooking them, so as to prevent "bleeding" or having the color run out. The skins are left on for the same reason. To peel beets quickly drop them for a moment into cold water and the skin and stem can be slipped off. Serve hot, sliced or diced, with butter, salt and pepper.

"Manna-hatin," The Story of New York

Old Financial Institution Tells How The City Grew To Be The Commercial Metropolis Of The World

Reprinted as a serial by courtesy of P. A. Rowley, President, The Manhattan Company, New York

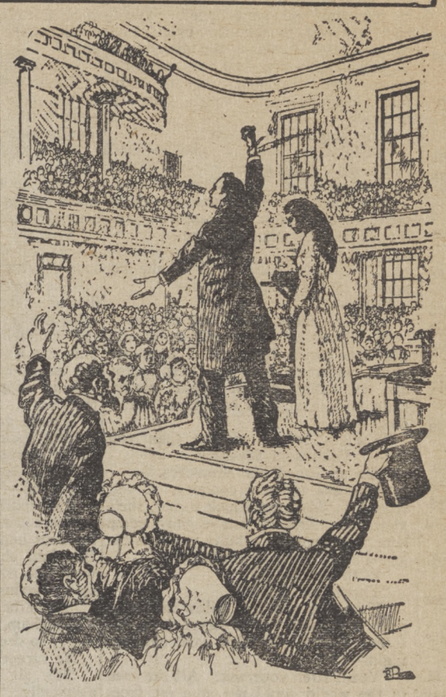
BROOKLYN'S FAMOUS PREACHER

TWO inventions of the period have left their indelible mark on the city's growth and industry. The sewing-machine of Elias Howe made possible quantity clothing manufacture—a kind of manufacture that takes the minimum of space in a crowded metropolis—and is therefore New York's own industry. The second invention, a "vertical screw railway," which in 1850 raised freight from floor to floor at 201 Cherry Street for Hecker Brothers, Millers, was the parent of the elevator, without which four and five-story buildings could never have grown into sky-scrapers of forty and fifty stories.

In such an age, it was natural that distinguished visitors should continue to appear. Barnum established a precedent for later impressarios when he charged $225 for a seat in Castle Garden at the opening concert of Jenny Lind; Charles Dickens was the recipient of the city's lavish hospitality, though later he said some rude things when he published his "American Notes." Louis Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, was acclaimed by New York with the deepest and most sincere emotions.

In spite of such evidence of prosperity and culture as the Crystal Palace (on the site of Bryant Park) where a World's Exhibition of Industries was held in 1853, the building of the Academy of Music on Fourteenth Street and the establishment of the Philharmonic Society in 1842, panic was once more in the air. Rioting, however, was given a stern lesson in the Astor Place tragedy of 1849, when the militia, firing upon a mob gathered before the theatre to take sides in a personal feud between two actors, Forest and Macready, killed twenty-two persons and wounded at least forty more. Rioting was checked, but unrest persisted.

By 1857, over-speculation, over-building of gallant clipper ships (and perhaps the very spirit of optimism and exaggeration that had pushed New York so far) brought a severe re-action. The Ohio Life Insurance Company failed first, precipitating about nine hundred and eighty-five other failures in the city. "Anything will make a fortune, provided it has stock to sell!" had been New York's belief too long.



Henry Ward Beecher "sold" a slave from his pulpit in Brooklyn.

In the Bowery one day in the fifties moved a terrifying figure twenty feet in height, represented as trying to break through the bonds which restrained it. At Union Square, the figure turned left and proceeded slowly down Broadway to City Hall Park. New York was just holding another of its parades—but this one was grim rather than triumphant, for the labels on the "float" read "The Phantom of Disunion" and "Let no man sunder the Union that God formed!"

New York's spontaneous impulse was against the vague menace of a disrupted nation that was already manifesting itself. On the other hand, commercial New York has always dreaded war, and the approaching conflict between the North and South over slavery found its shrewd merchants no more reconciled than before to the prospects of ruined business. It is true that New York, nearly a quarter century earlier, had set free its own slaves, but tolerance was an old habit; New York wanted to encourage no abolition speeches that would menace trade with the southern states.

In Brooklyn it was different. That gentle city, giving her boys and girls a wide humanitarian culture in such fine schools as the Pratt Institute, the boys' Polytechnic Institute, and the Adelphi College (the Packer Institute was not at that time a reality but only a plan) and fostering a spirit of piety in her annual Children's Day Sunday school parade, was uncompromising about abolition. For about two score years, Henry Ward Beecher was pastor of the Brooklyn Plymouth Church, swaying, as no other man of his time could, a membership of three thousand, and a visiting multitude that often overflowed into the streets. When one of these Sunday visitors asked directions to the church (for then as now one had to ask his way around Brooklyn) the answer was usually, "Cross Fulton Street and follow the crowd!"

On one fine June Sunday in 1856 the crowd was even greater than usual. Handbills and newspapers had announced an astounding event: Henry Ward Beecher intended to auction a slave girl from his own pulpit. With such dramatic effect did Beecher use the language of the slave market in bidding for the price of Sarah's freedom, that men threw their purses into the collection plate and women stripped off their jewels. Sarah's liberty was heavily over-subscribed, and the auction probably went far toward freeing others. Many years later when Britain's attitude was bitterly hostile to the Union cause, Beecher crossed the ocean on what has been called the most remarkable embassy of all times, to win the sympathies of audience after audience that was angrily determined to prevent his very appearance.

SENATOR CALEB H. BAUMES

Republican Nominee for Lieutenant Governor.

Senator Caleb Howard Baumes, Republican nominee for Lieutenant Governor, has become well known to the public as the father of the Baumes law and the chairman of the New York State Crime Commission. Senator Baumes was born in Bethlehem, Albany County, Mar. 31, 1863. He was educated in Fort Edward Collegiate Institute and after his graduation was a public school teacher from 1883 to 1890.

For five years he was a bookkeeper in a wholesale provision house in Newburgh and President of the Queens City Provision Company of that city. In 1898 he was admitted to the New York Bar and practiced law in Newburgh. He was a member of the Assembly from 1909 to 1913, and a member of the State Constitutional Convention in 1915. In 1919 he was elected to the State Senate, of which he is still a member. In 1926 the Senator was made chairman of the Baumes Commission, a joint legislative committee, in which capacity he has had a large part in framing amendments to the penal law.

DANIEL H. CONWAY

Republican Nominee for Comptroller.

Mayor Daniel H. Conway, three times the chief executive of Oswego, is the choice of the Republican Party as candidate for Comptroller. Born in Troy, December 26, 1879, he has made his way through sheer grit and hard work. He was the youngest child of a large family, and while he received his early education in the public schools, was not permitted to go far in his learning, on account of financial pressure at home. He went to work in a Troy collar factory at $4 a week.

The hours of employment allowed time for further schooling and after engaging in other pursuits in his native city, migrated to Oswego eighteen year ago, where he rose rapidly in business endeavor. Starting in the cotton manufacturing industry he eventually became treasurer of the Oswego Yarn Mills and finally, president of the Conway Knitting Hills.

Mayor Conway is married and is the father of six children, five boys and a girl.

ISADORE BROOKSTEIN

Republican Nominee for Attorney General.

Isadore Brookstein, Republican nominee for Attorney General, was born in Albany, Feb. 12, 1891, and worked his way to leadership in the Republican Party through force of work, ability and winning personality. He worked his way through life much in the same manner. Educated in the Albany public schools he was compelled to work his way through the high school and, later, through the Albany Law School, from which he was graduated in 1912.

As a boy he sold newspapers in his native city, and later, did odd jobs and clerked in a drug store. after being graduated he began the practice of law in Albany. In 1920 he was appointed Assistant District Attorney of Albany County and a year later was made a county judge by then Governor Nathan L. Miller. This year he was made chairman of the Republican County Committee of Albany.

Judge Brookstein is married and has three children, two boys and a girl.

CUTHBERT WINFRED POND

Nominee for Court of Appeals Associate Judge.

Cuthbert Winfred Pond is a candidate to succeed himself as Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals, a position which he has held with distinction and honor. So high is his standing with the members of the Bench and the Bar, that none has been selected to oppose him. He was born in Lockport, Niagara County, N. Y., June 20, 1864. He was educated in Lockport schools and Cornell University and was admitted to the Bar in 1886.

Ford Digs Two Mile Tunnel for A Billion Gallons of Water a Day

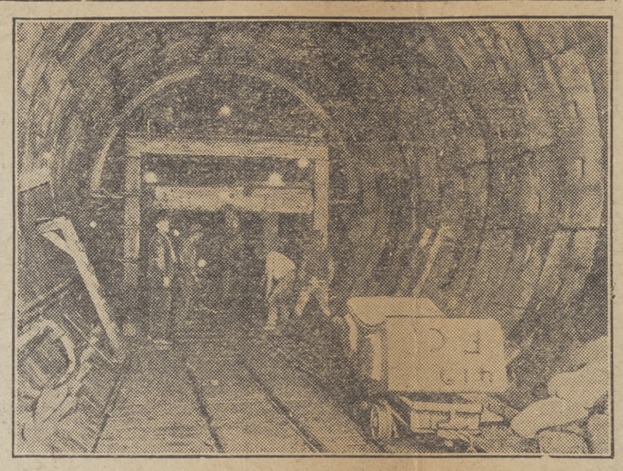
NEARLY a billion gallons of water a day—more than is used by the cities of Detroit, Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Washington combined—will be the capacity of a huge tunnel now nearing completion at the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company, Dearborn, Michigan.

The tunnel will replace the present water intake system which supplies the Ford plants with 500,000,000 gallons a day. At the same time the company is remodeling its power house to greatly increase the power output. Both improvements, costing several million dollars, are being made to enlarge the production facilities of the Ford plant.

Sixty Feet Under Ground

In constructing the waterway, the largest of its kind ever undertaken by a single business concern, the engineers are burrowing sixty feet under ground for a distance of two and a fifth miles. They have gone under main highways, railroads, street car tracks, bridges, a cemetery and a creek.

One of the most difficult tasks was that of tunneling under Baby Creek at a point which is crossed by a railroad bridge and where also a large sewer is under construction by the city of Detroit. The piles that provide the foundation for the bridge and those driven by the company constructing the sewer formed a network on each side of the creek. It was the task of the Ford engineers to burrow under the creek, sewer and bridge, going between the piles without striking or weakening them.



The head of one of the sections of the Ford tunnel showing the machinery used to burrow through the ground. In the foreground is one of the concrete blocks used to line the tunnel which has an inside diameter of fifteen feet.

Boring of the tunnel is accomplished by means of a shield—a large steel cylinder fourteen feet long and twenty-one feet in outside diameter with a solid steel shell or skin two and a fourth inches thick. This shield has a bulkhead which is made fast near the front end. There are four openings through which the mud streams, like toothpaste from a tube, as the shield is shoved forward by twenty powerful hydraulic jacks.

When the shield has been pushed forward sufficiently concrete blocks two and a half feet wide and five feet long, each weighing 3,420 pounds, are placed to form a ring around the circumference of the tunnel. One of them acts as a keystone so that the lining of concrete, which is eighteen inches thick, withstands the pressure of the earth. After this steel forms are set up and filled with concrete to form a solid inner lining which is also eighteen inches thick.

The present intake system of the Ford plant has a capacity of 500,000,000 gallons a day. The new tunnel will be able to carry 913,600,000 gallons.

Ninth Installment

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Giles Chittenham swears to avenge the death of his young half-brother Rodney, driven to suicide by the notorious Julie Farrow who had spurned his love. He will make Julie love him, then throw her aside as she threw Rodney. He meets her in Switzerland, goes with her to the hotel on the St. Bernard Pass, and succeeds in winning her love. To his amazement, he discovers that he has fallen overwhelmingly in love with her himself! And he is married, to an American girl with whom he has nothing in common.

Then he discovers that this girl is not the same Julie Farrow who ruined Rodney, but her cousin of the same name. She scorns him when he confesses his love and his inability to marry her. They meet later in London, where she is going the pace that kills. Another man, Lawrence Schofield, wants to marry her, in spite of her wild life.

Through his friend Lombard, Giles Chittenham meets the "other Julie," the notorious woman who had ruined Rodney's life. She tells him that she is going to die; the doctors have given her up as incurable and she is leaving England. She is worried about her cousin, the girl Chittenham loves. That Julie—his Julie—is going in fast company, among them a common little American girl named Sadie Barrow.

And Sadie Barrow is Giles Chittenham's wife. He did not know that she was in England. That night he meets her at a party at his mother's house. They pretend to be strangers.

Giles learns that Sadie Barrow, his wife, has gone in for spiritualism and is attending seances by a medium named Chryer.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Julie swung round from the contemplation of her pale face beneath the brim of the green hat which she had picked up from the bed to try on.

"No," she said sharply. "I'm just going out. Say I am engaged."

"Very good, Miss."

The door closed quietly behind the maid, and Bim said a trifle maliciously:

"He will think you are afraid of him, Julie."

Julie's cheeks flamed.

"Afraid—!"

She made an impetuous rush to the door and opened it.

"Wait a moment—"

The maid, already half-way across the little passage, turned.

"Tell Mr. Chittenham I will see him in five minutes," Julie said and went back to her bedroom.

Chittenham was standing by the mantel-shelf looking at an impressionist photograph of Bim Lennox, but he turned at once when the door opened.

"Hullo!" Julie greeted him with a casual nod. "What in the world brings you here at such an early hour? I've only just crawled out of bed myself."

"Oh, my dear, it's not worthy of you or of our love! Must you make it harder for us both than it already is? . . . Do you think it's nothing to me to see you as you were last night—to . . ."

The tender sincerity of his voice almost broke her down. She swayed a little and caught at a chair back, but when Chittenham would have gone to her she waved him furiously away.

"Don't touch me. Don't come near me."

For a moment she struggled hard for self-control, then she was erect once more and facing him defiantly.

"You said when I came in, that this must stop. Well, I agree, and so we'll just settle it now once and for all. And will you please understand, Mr. Chittenham, that you and I are nothing whatever to one another, and never have been. If you want to hear the truth I even rather dislike you. However foolish you once thought me . . . Oh, I'm not shirking the memory, if you are—" she broke out as he would have spoken. "I am quite willing to admit that for one night, just for a few hours—I let you think I rather liked you. Don't blame me for that. It was the snow and the wind, and being up there so far away from every one . . . In the morning it had all gone, and as I said then, we had come back to earth again." Her voice was studiously cold and quiet, almost expressionless.

"Do you believe in spiritualism, Mr. Chittenham?" she asked.

"No."

"Nor do I, but it seems all the fashion just now. There is to be a séance or whatever you call it at your mother's house to-morrow afternoon. That was Miss Barrow 'phoning She's an ardent believer—"

"She never used . . ." Giles began, then stopped

"It's all nonsense," he protested angrily. "A pack of charlatans duping a lot of silly women."

"Julie is going, too. They have got hold of some wonderful new medium—" Bim's voice was quietly sarcastic. "They have invited me, but it's not the sort of thing I care about."

"Look at the life you're leading. When you left my mother's house early this morning you were horribly drunk."

Chittenham frowned.

"It's not the sort of thing any healthy-minded person would care about anyway, and—" he paused. It was impossible to tell Bim that his mother had declared she would not have Julie in her house again. "I hope you will try and dissuade Miss Farrow from going," he added.

Bim shrugged her shoulders.

"You might as well ask me to try and stop Niagara," she said hopelessly. "Once Julie has made up her mind nothing will change it."

Bim went with him to the door, but after they had said good-bye he hesitated and came back.

"Miss Lennox—don't leave her if you can help it."

She spoke rather loudly and defiantly, and she deliberately left the door open behind her.

Chittenham stepped past her and closed it, then he came back to where she stood.

"This has got to stop, Julie," he said without preamble.

Julie opened her eyes wide.

"Stop?" she echoed blankly. "What has got to stop? my getting up so late, do you mean? My dear man—"

He interrupted ruthlessly.

"The whole of this miserable, damnable play-acting has got to stop. You're ruining yourself and me body and soul. Do you think I don't understand? do you think I'm such a fool that you can take me in for one minute by all this—this childishness—?"

Before she could prevent him or move a step from him he caught her by the shoulders, roughly turning her round to the morning sunlight which streamed through the window. "Look at the stuff on your face? You'd have scorned to use the muck two months ago. Look at the life you're leading—when you left my mother's house last night—or rather early this morning—you were horribly drunk—"

Julie laughed in his face.

"Delightfully drunk!" she mocked him coolly. "But go on, go on! Don't let me spoil this soul-saving lecture. You're mistaken you vocation. You ought to have been a low-church parson instead of what you are—a coward and a cheat. . . . I can just picture you in a clerical collar, with all the old tabbies in the congregation—"

"Julie—!"

She wrenched herself free of him.

"I object to being called by my Christian name by you. I hate the name, anyway. You can keep it for my estimable cousin—she'll appreciate your cave-man attentions and I don't—she . . ."

"She's a braver woman than you are—" Giles said savagely.

Julie shrugged her shoulders.

"Has she made a conquest of you already? Well, good luck to her, she's welcome. And if you've only come here to behave like a bully you'd better go—I've a lunch appointment—"

"With Schofield?"

"That's my affair."

"If he was a decent fellow he'd stop your nonsense. He'd never have allowed you to do what you did last night—"

"You flatter your sex. All the men in the world could not stop me from doing exactly as I please—"

They faced one another like deadly enemies, white and shaken. It was astonishing how suddenly the storm had arisen.

Chittenham was not a conceited man, but by his own love for Julie he measured her love for him, an unhappy love that would give neither of them rest or peace, and could not bring happiness, and realising this he suddenly broke out passionately:

"You will make your name a byword, even amongst these—these ridiculous people you call your friends."

"And that, of course, will break my heart, if it is not already broken," Julie sneered. "It matters so much what people like Doris Gardener and Sadie Barrow say . . . They haven't any vices themselves, have they?"

"At least Sadie does not drink," Chittenham interrupted unthinkingly.

He saw the sudden look of angry surprise that flashed into Julie's eyes.

"You seem to have found out a great deal about Sadie in a short time," she said sharply.

"One does not have to be either very quick or very inquisitive to find out such a thing," Giles answered. "As a matter of fact I find her very charming," he added with an almost childish desire to sting her.

But Julie calmly agreed.

"So do I. She and I have a great deal in common. Chiefly our dislike of your noble sex."

"Schofield always excepted, I suppose."

Julie laughed.

"Lawrence Schofield certainly excepted. He is a great friend of mine—he is rich, and moreover he is anxious to marry me—"

"You don't care two straws about the man."

"On the contrary, I care a great many straws. Not that it is any business of yours—"

"It is my business when the woman I love talks of rushing into a ridiculous marriage."

"The woman you love!" Julie's face flamed. "How infinitely touching! and what a pity you are not free to marry me yourself. Think of the divine bliss we should experience—think of the happy-ever-after ending. . . ."

Julie slipped past him and opened the door.

"Please go," she said.

Bim spoke from the narrow hall rather nervously:

"Julie, dear—Mr. Schofield has just driven up—"

"I'm coming at once."

There was an eloquent silence after the door had slammed behind her, then Bim half shrugged her shoulders and went into the sitting-room where Giles stood staring out of the window.

"Don't be too angry with her, Mr. Chittenham," she said. "I am so sorry, so dreadfully sorry."

He turned and looked at her.

"It's all my fault," he broke out agitatedly. "And there's nothing I can do to put it right—nothing."

The telephone rang suddenly and Bim went across the room to answer it.

"Yes? . . . No, Bim Lennox speaking. Oh—yes, Miss Barrow. No, she's just gone out. Can I give her a message? Oh . . . yes, very well—tomorrow afternoon at four."

Bim hung up the receiver and turned. There was a little angry frown between her level brows.

"No."

"You see—" He flushed, and stopped, only to flounder on again. "You see, it's all my fault—all my cursed stupidity."

"I know. Julie told me."

"She told you?"

"Yes."

"And I suppose you think . . . what do you think?"

Bim smiled.

"It would be so easy for me to say that I think you behaved like a knave—so easy to rail at you, but I don't want to. I think Life is so tragic—nothing ever seems to go quite right for any of us, does it?—at least that is my experience. We can only just go on—hoping that something will turn up to straighten things out, and it so seldom does. I often wonder if it isn't because we lack courage."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean courage to face facts and see things as they really are—" She looked away from him. "Mr. Chittenham, you know Julie doesn't really . . . hate you—"

She laughed rather sadly.

"I suppose I ought not to have told you that, but I can't bear to see her as she is now, so reckless, so broken . . ."

She stopped, afraid she had said too much, and for a moment there was a profound silence, then Chittenham held out his hand again.

"Thank you," he said.

As Chittenham walked away from the flat he made up his mind to one thing. He would ask Sadie to divorce him.

If Julie still loved him . . . in his heart he was sure that she did, and nothing else mattered.

He had promised to lunch with his mother, but in his eagerness he forgot about it, and went straight to the hotel where Sadie was staying.

She was out and they did not know when she would be back. Giles left a message asking her to ring him up.

He waited till six o'clock and rang up Julie's flat.

Bim Lennox answered the telephone.

"No, Julie is not in. She rang just now to say she was dining out and not coming home to change. I think she is with Mr. Schofield still."

Giles hung the receiver and turned away. He was powerless, and yet he knew that he could never be content to let things remain as they were. He must see Julie again, somehow. . . .

Some one tapped at his door.

"Mr. Lombard to see you sir."

"Confound! . . . Oh, well, show him up."

Lombard seemed nervous and apologetic. "I say—" he broke out suddenly. "I'm in the devil of a fix—"

Chittenham looked up.

"Money?"

"How did you know?"

Not the least enjoyable feature of Reno's performance is the running fire of comment with which he enlivens everything he does. These fragmentary remarks are full of fun and wit, with flash after flash of good-tempered satire aimed at himself or his work.

In his performance he springs one surprise after another on his audience, keeping all in a state of breathless wonder and delight.

NO BACKWARD STEP

By J. W. H. de Belleville

New York, Oct. 28—Among intelligent people it might not be difficult to find a majority who would admit that whatever else might be said about prohibition, in surveying its progress over the spread of nearly a century, it at least has roused the public conscience as never before to the evils of beverage alcohol. Here of course one stumbles again upon the necessity of supplying a definition for the word "Intelligent", which is a difficult, perhaps an impossible, task, since unfortunately it is affected by the same quality of relativity, about whose influence upon our knowledge of the physical universe laymen and college freshmen are today conversing. What is an indication of intelligence to one person is often a mark of rank stupidity to another, assuming of course that intelligence and stupidity are opposites, which may be open to question, since one is not always a bar to the other. Reputedly intelligent persons can be as stupid about some matters as anyone else.

Dr. Albert Einstein is believed by some to possess the greatest mind of his generation, and in the sphere of physics this may be true. This is a question to be decided, not now but in the dim future, and by those who in the light of a steady widening scientific horizon shall be able to appraise his achievements. Notwithstanding his allegedly great intelligence, however, this sensational demolisher of Euclidean doctrine, in religious matters is a skeptic. At least he is ready to admit the possibility that the world, with its tremendous physical, mental and spiritual activity, is a meaningless phenomenon. Human life is an ephemeral pageant; it has no goal. Such an ascription of futility to the Architect of the universe in the face of His stupendous creations may be entirely comprehensible to the scientific mind, but to the average layman it is a colossal absurdity. So therefore, though to the scientist Einstein be the greatest mind that ever wrestled with the physical mysteries, to many others he will always remain unintelligent. Such is the theory of relativity when applied to the intelligence of its discoverer.

By the same token, to return to the original proposition, there are supposedly intelligent persons who deny the evils of beverage alcohol. It appeals to them as a harmless indulgence, furnishing an escape from the unpleasant realities. It is true, it rouses slumbering passions and elemental instincts, but what of it? Man is an animal, and in his animal nature there are more points of resemblance to the beasts than there of difference. In his ingenuity he has devised what to some persons is a most delightful delirifacient—alcohol. It supplies lenses through which the world takes on a rosy hue. The sensational faculties in the early stages are greatly magnified, in a more or less illusory manner, to be sure, because of a corresponding distortion of the nerve centers, but temporarily it has an entrancing effect. Obviously, man, being an animal, would also be an ass to surrender it. In some such fashion as this the resentful wet reasons against the implied denials of prohibition.

Nor are all drys immune to the lure of this argument though they might be a long way from voting to restore the legalized liquor traffic. The capacity for the sensational delights of alcohol is not a monopoly of the wets. So far as the physical mechanism is concerned, the drys are quite as able to enjoy them as anyone else. The difference between the two classes of people lies not in the physical capacity for enjoyment but in the spiritual capacity for self-denial. The one class emphasizes the beastly quality of self-indulgence: the other, the ennobling quality of sacrifice. And it is sacrifice to a purpose since it is for the benefit of society as a whole. That an entire nation should undertake such a sacrifice is the most inspiring spectacle of modern times.

There is a fallacy repeatedly advanced by the wets that before prohibition the consumption of beverage alcohol had been decreasing. That it is a fallacy is confirmed by Colonel Amos W. Woodcock in his recent monograph, from which the following passage is quoted:

"It has been stated frequently that the United States, as a nation, was becoming more temperate prior to the passage of the national prohibition act in 1920. There are no facts observable to warrant this statement.

"The consumption of alcohol beverages from 1900 to 1914, the last full year of unrestricted manufacture, shows a marked increase. From 1914 to 1920 the manufacture of alcoholic beverages was restricted by wartime regulations, increased taxes on alcoholic beverages and wartime prohibition, consequently production in the year 1914 is taken as a basis of comparison.

"In 1900 there were withdrawn from warehouses, tax paid, about one and two-fifths billions of gallons of alcoholic beverages. There was a steady increase until 1914, when two and one-fifth billions of gallons were withdrawn, tax paid. During this period many states of the Union had voted state prohibition, so that the increased consumption showed a much higher rate in certain wet states than it did in the United States at large.

"As an indication that the consumption of liquor was increasing rapidly during the years 1900 to 1914, invested capital in the liquor industry of the United States is taken into consideration.

"In 1900 there was $456,145,000 invested in the liquor industry. In 1914 this amount had roughly doubled, as there was $915,715,000 invested in the liquor industry.

"The cost of alcohol drinking to the American people for the fourteen-year period from 1900 to 1914 averaged $2,000,000,000 a year."

Evidently, however, every year in this country under prohibition there has been an increasing number of persons ready to make a sacrifice for the benefit of their fellowmen. There are fewer of them thinking in terms of appetite, and more of them thinking in terms of spirit. Under such circumstances it is incredible that the country should seriously contemplate a backward step.

"Rainmakers" Can't Make Rain if They do Get Money From Gullible

By Caleb Johnson

This has been a great year for the "rainmakers".

All over the United States charlatans and fakers have been persuading communities to pay them for making rain. None of them have produced any rain, but a good many of them have collected. Some got their money first, where they found a particularly gullible community. Others took the chance that it would rain sooner or later anyway, and got contracts calling for the payment of money to them if it rained within a given period which was usually long enough to give the rainmaker a break.

Sooner or later it is bound to rain everywhere, except in the desert of Sahara and a few other arid regions of the earth. But anybody who pays a "rainmaker" to bring on the rain before the forces of Nature in their orderly progress are prepared to deliver a shower is just one more name added to the sucker list.

No human agency has yet succeeded in causing rain to fall.

No method known to science can cause rain to fall except at a cost far greater than all of the possible financial benefit of the rain when it did come.

There is always a certain amount of water vapor present in the atmosphere, even on the driest day. The professional "rainmakers" speak truly when they tell you that, but that is as far as their truth-telling goes. It is true that if that vapor could be condensed sufficiently in the air it would form rain-drops and fall to the ground, but all of the efforts to bring that about by human agency have failed.

Yet the belief in rainmaking is one of the oldest human superstitions. The natives of the East Indies and of some parts of Africa believe that their medicine men can cause rain. One method is to throw selected individuals into certain sacred lakes. Another African rainmaking device is for all of the people of a village to carry gourds filled with water from a stream to a dry field and spray the water into the air, apparently as a sort of "ground-bait" for rain.

Because thunder and lightning are usually accompanied by rain, the natives of some parts of India try to bring on rain by making their horses neigh like thunder. Black horses, or horses covered with black cloths, in imitation of thunderclouds are supposed to be most effective for this kind of magic. In Estonia the peasants strike steel against stone to make sparks, a sort of miniature lightning, while beating metal kettles to simulate thunder. In the East Indies professional rainmakers make noises like ducks, frogs and other amphibious creatures in the hope of luring rain from the sky, while other savage races attempt to make it rain by flogging each other with switches until the blood runs down their backs like rain; this is supposed to tempt the rain to fall!

You will hear people say that it always rains on the Fourth of July, because of the amount of gunpowder that is exploded, the theory being that the explosion jars the water-vapor in the sky and causes it to condense and fall. But the U. S. Weather Bureau records show that rain is no more prevalent on the Fourth of July than on any other date, anywhere. Similarly, it is a common belief that it always rains after a great battle, because of the shooting off of cannon and small-arms. But it is curious to note that Plutarch, the ancient Roman historian, who died centuries before gunpowder was invented, recorded the same belief of rain following great battles.

Most modern efforts at rainmaking are based on the idea of exploding something in the air. Serious scientific efforts to determine whether this or any other method within human power could produce rain have been undertaken in the past by several governments, including our own. Nearly forty years ago R. G. Dyrenforth, a scientist of standing, was engaged by the United States Department of Agriculture to carry on such experiments. Mr. Dyrenforth spent $17,000. He tried sending up balloons filled with dynamite or with an explosive mixture of oxygen and hydrogen, and exploded them in the upper air. He produced plenty of loud noise, but no rain. The late C. W. Post of Battle Creek spent a great deal of money in bombarding the sky, but the only rain that fell was the tail-end of a general rainfall which occurred in that entire region.

Other scientific effort at rainmaking was proposed by an English Savant, Professor Espy, who pointed out that if a sufficiently strong upward current of heated air could be sent aloft, the warm air on expanding would cool the water vapor and precipitate it. This theory, which is undoubtedly sound enough scientifically, was propounded in 1839, and many efforts to demonstrate it by building huge fires in drought-stricken regions have since been made, but without bringing rain. An investigation by the government of New South Wales, Australia, into the cost of carrying out the Espy program indicated that it would require the burning of nine million tons of coal a day to send up enough hot air to materially effect the rainfall in that region.

R. G. Dyrenforth's conclusions were to the same effect. It is humanly possible to make rain fall, he says, provided there is a raincloud present, or conditions such as often come close to rain without quite reaching the point of precipitation, but the cost and labor involved would be so great as to make it more economical to lose all the crops and all the livestock which would perish by drought than to spend the necessary money to bring on rain.

Out in Medicine Hat, Canada, as lately as 1921, a tank filled with chemicals was exploded some distance above the ground, but the rain which followed shortly after was less than fell in nearby regions where there had been no explosions. Commenting on this, the Canadian meteorological authorities pointed out that to cause rain to fall to a depth of one inch over an area of a hundred square miles it would be necessary to condense six million tons of water vapor, requiring the lifting of hundreds of tons of air, and that there is no energy at the command of man sufficient to do this.

Yet every dry season brings forth its "rainmakers" who collect money for their efforts, even in such an enlightened country as we like to believe ours is. Just the other day a California chamber of commerce paid one of them $300 and promised him $1,000 per inch of rain falling during the month, up to five inches.

Rainmaking, it seems, is not a problem of meteorology, but rather of psychology.

COUNTY RECEIVES SHARE OF GAS TAX

The largest amount of motor fuel tax money to be distributed since the gasoline tax has been in force is that sent to the City of New York and to the 57 counties outside the greater city according to announcement by Thomas M. Lynch, commissioner of taxation and finance. The latest apportionment is the sixth since the tax has been effective and totaled $5,574,997.79, with the state receiving $3,196,765.85, New York City $475,646.79 and the remaining counties of the state $1,902,587.15.

The amount of money allotted to the state is 75 per cent of the tax collected during September for the August tax levy, the law stating that this is to be made monthly. The sums apportioned to New York City and the other counties of the state represent 5 and 20 per cent respectively of the total for the three months ending September 30. The state's share is deposited in the general fund for state highway construction and maintenance. That portion allotted to New York City is for the reduction of taxes and the amounts given each county are destined for the state aid fund of each of these places, to be used for the construction of the secondary system of traffic arteries.

"Steuben and St. Lawrence counties again receive the lion's share", stated Commissioner Lynch when he gave out the figures. "The highway mileage in each county is the same as the last distribution and therefore these two counties get $75,902 and $73,785 respectively. Hamilton, Schenectady and Rockland counties are again low because of the small amount of miles of unimproved roads there.

"This latest distribution of course reflects the amount of business in the motor fuel line during the several months when the greatest number of tourists and vacationists are on the highways—July and August. It is at the rate of approximately $26.45 a mile. The net total of collections from June 1929, when the first collection was made under the new law, up to October 1 of this year was $37,072,867.50. Of this amount the state has received $27,767,150.63. To the City of New York we have sent $1,851,143.36 and there has been divided among the remaining 57 counties of the state the sum of $7,404,573.51.

To make grape juice sherbet, sweeten the juice to taste with sirup rather than plain sugar, after adding one tablespoon of lemon juice for each quart of grape juice. Turn in the freezer until stiff. Add a beaten egg white after the mixture is frozen, give the dasher a few more turns, remove, pack.

STATE PRODUCE IN NEW YORK CITY

Pears Unchanged

New York, Oct. 24—The market was without material change on pears, says the New York Office of the State Department of Agriculture and Markets. Offerings of Bartletts from Western New York jobbed out within the price range of $1.25 to $1.75 per bushel basket. Seckels realized from $1.25 to $2.00. There was only a small increase forecast of pear production for the country. Approximately 25,000,000 bushels are now expected or about 3,000,000 more than last year. The 1930 crop is the largest on record, except for that of 1926.

Cabbage Steady

Price changes on state cabbage were few and small in a steady market. Supplies were moderate and buying was fair. At yards and piers jobbing sales on white danish, in sacks of 90 pounds, were reported at principally $1.00. Four early cabbage producing states expect to increase their combined plantings about 20 per cent over those of last winter and may have altogether 38,690 acres this season. Florida and California show considerable increases, but Louisiana a slight decrease. Southern Texas growers are planning an increase of one-third and may have 23,900 acres in early cabbage. South Carolina has 1,300 acres of fall crop cabbage, a heavy increase over last season.

Country Dressed Calves Weak

Fresh receipts of country dressed calves were light to heavy during the week. The demand was continued very slow and the market closed weak. Fresh receipts per pound: Choice 14 to 17 cents; fair to good 11 to 13 cents; small to medium 6 to 10 cents.

Live Poultry and Live Rabbits

Fresh receipts of live poultry were moderate by express and heavy by freight, especially at the weekend. The market opened stronger early in the weak but closed weak with the demand slow, apparently due to the heavy freight receipts. Nearby express receipts per pound: Fowls, leghorns, 10 to 17 cents. Chickens, rocks, 22 to 23 cents; reds 15 to 20 cents; leghorns 15 to 18 cents. Ducks, Long Island 25 cents; other nearby 18 to 19 cents. Fresh receipts of live rabbits, while light at first, increased during the week. The demand was slow and the market was steady. By the coop, 14 to 20 cents per pound.

Livestock

Steers were in moderate receipt. The demand was slow and the market was irregular. Bulls and cows were scarce and met a good demand at steady prices. Vealers and calves were in moderate supply, but the demand was slow and the market was irregular. Sheep and lambs receipts were light, but the demand for lambs was slow and the prices declined $1.00 per cwt. The demand for hogs was very good at steady prices. Medium grasser steers $8.10 to $9.00; common to medium cows $4.00 to $5.00; medium bulls up to $6.25. Good to choice vealers $13.00 to $15.00; medium $9.50 to $12.50; cull and common $5.00 to $9.00. Good to choice 160 to 220 pound hogs $9.75 to $10.25. Good to choice lambs, $8.00 to $8.75; medium $6.50 to $7.75. Ewes $4.00 down.

Butter-Cheese-Eggs

The butter market remained steady all the week on the top grades showing weakness on the lower grades at the close. Creamery salted, higher score, 40½ to 41 cents; extra, 92 score, 40 cents.

The cheese market has continued steady throughout the week. New York State fresh specials 21 to 21½ cents; fresh fancy 20 cents.

The egg market opened steady and a firmer feeling was evident at the end of the week. Although top quality white eggs remained unchanged in price they were apparently in active demand. Top quality brown eggs advanced two cents and the best grade of mixed colors advanced 4 cents during the week. Nearby hennery whites, closely selected extras 52 to 55 cents per doz.; average extras 45 to 50 cents; mediums 30 to 38 cents; pullets 27 to 31 cents; pewees 22 to 26 cents. Nearby hennery browns, top quality, 43 to 52 cents.

Hay Steady to Firm

Receipts of hay were below requirements causing the prices to advance $1.00 per ton during the week. Stocks on hand were at a low point; buyers were anxiously seeking supplies, and the limited offerings were promptly absorbed at full quotations. Most of the hay arriving was medium to low grade. The market closed with a firm undertone. Rye straw was slow; No. 1 California alfalfa was slow; prices declined $1.00 per ton. Large bales timothy No. 1, $28.00 per ton; No. 2, $26.00 to $27.00; No. 3, $24.00 to $25.00.

KILL QUACK GRASS BY FALL PLOWING

In spite of the reputation of quack grass it has one weakness that makes it vulnerable during the fall months, says Professor John H. Barron of the New York state college of agriculture. Established quack grass roots are largely confined to the top three inches of the soil and shallow plowing with later freezing often kills troublesome stands, he advises.

In meadows and pastures the fall plowing should not exceed four inches, just enough to turn out the roots. If there is any tendency for the quack to show leaf growth one or two harrowings should be made. Then in the spring cultivate as soon as the ground is dry enough, and repeat frequently enough that the quack does not show green leaves. Such a program kept up until the crop is planted usually weakens the quack so that little trouble is given the cultivated crop.

For the corn or potato field it is best to harrow frequently this fall rather than to plow it. The common type of harrows are good, but the newer, heavier types are better. If a seeding is to be made in a grain crop cultivate as often as possible in the spring delaying the seeding as late as is safe to get a good yield. Where a cultivated crop will be followed by a cultivated crop Professor Barron advises the fall harrowing followed by more spring harrowing with the spring plowing delayed as long as possible. After planting and before the crop comes up a spiked toothed harrow or weeder can be used successfully. Two successive years of such treatment will kill almost any stand of quack, he says.

HINTS FOR THE HOME

GRAPES

For centuries upon centuries grapes have stood as a symbol of plenty and happiness.

And not just because grapes are the fruit from which wine is made. But because grapes, coming late in the season, when summer is going or has gone, give a final gift of sweetness and deliciousness to the world.

In these days when wine is taboo we still find in grapes one of our most welcome and palatable fruits. Perhaps the ancient races of the world, Greeks and Babylonians and Egyptians, knew delicious grapes. They could have known nothing better than the wide variety of white and green, red and purple grapes that we have today.

There are many delicious ways of preserving grapes for further use. But they are most attractive when served fresh.

Some connoisseurs think grapes should be served rather warm—the temperature that one finds them in a sunny vineyard. Most of us keep them on ice. Indeed, we must do so to keep them at their best. But if you are one of those persons who prefers them not chilled, then remove them from the refrigerator half an hour or more before serving them. Let them stand in the room—even in the sun—until you wish them. They will then be more like the grapes you might pick if you yourself went to the vineyard for them.

There is certainly nothing prettier, however, than a thoroughly chilled grape with drops of dew on it. That is, a grape that has been rinsed in water and then chilled without drying. Frosty and tempting, is this grape, both for the eye and tongue.

Grapes may be served in a bowl, attractively piled up. Or they may be spread out on a big silver or glass or china platter. If you wish, and can, you may place each bunch of grapes, or each two or three bunches, on a grape leaf, that has been washed carefully and dried. This makes a most attractive background for grapes, whether they be purple, green or red.

With Mutton

Soak a tablespoon of haricot beans overnight. Cut the mutton into small pieces, and fry them just brown in a little dripping. Peel and cut up a carrot, turnip and onion, and fry them for five minutes in the fat the meat was fried in.

Put the meat in a casserole or stewpan, with a seasoning of salt and pepper, the vegetables and haricot beans. Just cover with water. Bring to a boil, remove any scum, then simmer for two hours.

Two cutlets, or four if small, may be cut off from the neck of mutton and grilled or fried in egg and breadcrumbs and served with mashed potatoes, or surrounded with boiled macaroni and tomato sauce.

Of all common foods cheese is one of the richest in calcium. Many Americans do not get in their foods enough calcium to furnish their bodies with the quantity of this mineral needed for building and repairing teeth and bones. Cheese made from whole milk also contains a considerable quantity of fat. The protein of cheese is the same efficient kind as that in meat. A cheese dish is therefore high in food value.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

MARRIAGE

Two elements are at work in every legitimate marriage contract, "sex-urge," and "love." The physician, in his daily round of service to humankind, observes many phenomena which enter mightily into human existence for better or worse. I think the conscientious doctor may be a first-rate moral and spiritual adviser as well as battler against disease

The sex-problem, like the poor, "we have with us always." Without it, I fear there would be few marriages. Cut out the sex-urge, and, the few marriage contracts, based on love alone, would endure unto the end, "when death do us part."

Sex-urge, is not love. Holy Writ refers to it as "lust of the flesh," a part of that evil triumvirate, "the world, the flesh and the devil." It is but a means to an end; to "multiply and replenish the earth." Sex-urge is human, for human exercise and control. If uncontrolled—but who doesn't know the penalty?

Love is far above the lust of flesh. When men and women love each other truly, independent of sexual attraction, the divorce courts go a-begging. I have seen time and again, men and women live as husband and wife, regardless of sexual bankruptcy, and their devotion and happiness seemed far above the intensely animal natures. The sex-urge nuptial contract is dangerous if wholly animal; it is not much higher than the union of the beasts of the field. The sexual marriage ceases when sex fails, then infidelity, unchastity, jealousy, the divorce court and its miserable attempts at self-justification. No, sex-urge is not love; the latter rises above the coarse, animal passion.

When men and women learn that true love is an identity far removed from sex-urge; when they try to occupy a plane above that of the beast of the field, then, and not till then will the highest ideal of humanity have been realized.

McCHESNEY'S ADDRESS TO THE VOTERS -- -- --

I am a candidate in the coming election for the office of Steuben County sheriff. In a county as large as ours, both in area and population, together with the brief time wherein candidates are obliged to make their canvass, it is a physical impossibility for one to see all voters in person. I am therefore writing you in the situation. I am a native of Bath, and in my youth and early manhood was engaged in farming. Later, I was elected by the Democratic party in Bath township, as superintendent of highways. I was re-elected to the office, in a town with a large nominal Republican plurality. I appreciate my thrice tenure of this office was my command of the friendship and confidence of my neighbors, regardless of their political affiliations. Later I was named to a position in the State Highway Department, where I resigned when the late Lynn W. Kellog was elected to his first term in the shrievalty. I assumed the position as a deputy clerk and as clerk on Mr. Kellogg's staff. In that capacity I gained a most comprehensive knowledge as well as experience in the important details and workings of the sheriff's department, an experience that in event of my election as sheriff, would prove to my great advantage. I have continued in intimate touch with this work, being a deputy the second term of the late Sheriff Kellogg, as well as at present a deputy on the staff of Sheriff Bartlett. I was the Democratic candidate last year for County Superintendent of Public Welfare, but was defeated by the present superintendent Mr. Hardenbrook by a plurality of approximately 1,200, as against a plurality of nearly 9,000 accorded head of the Republican ticket. With Mrs. McChesney, I am a member of the Bath Presbyterian Church; I hold membership in Steuben Lodge, No. 112, F. and A. M., and in Bath Chapter, No. 95, Royal Arch Masons, Bath, N. Y. I am active in Bath Grange, Steuben County Pomona and in the New York State Grange. I am in position because of my previous experience, to realize the importance of the duties of sheriff. I feel confident that my experience would enable me to proceed intelligently and efficiently in the administration of the office. A sheriff should be a man, aggressive as well as courageous in enforcement of the law. I believe I have such attributes. I feel that I could act as your sheriff, faithfully, honestly and fearlessly in an enforcement of every law within my jurisdiction. My election depends upon the confidence as expressed in me by all people of the county, who desire to see the sheriff's department efficiently, wisely, economically administered. I am asking your careful consideration of my candidacy, my experience, my fitness. I would greatly appreciate your vote, and would endeavor as your sheriff in every way and at all times so to serve you as to merit your confidence and support. I thank you in advance for all consideration and courtesies.

Cordially and respectfully,
JOSEPH C. McCHESNEY.

GIVE THE HENS THE AIR

Real troubles for poultrymen come with cold weather, if the laying house lacks a workable ventilation system, warns Professor H. E. Botsford of the New York State College of Agriculture. A lack of fresh air or the presence of foul air may cause gradual loss in vigor and then the hens are susceptible to colds and other troubles, he says. Fresh air intakes are easily arranged but the knotty problem is usually to have the outlet at the highest point in the house and to have it extend across the entire width of the house. The free Cornell bulletin E 180 gives sketches, drawings and directions for making and using straw lofts and ceilings to solve the ventilation puzzle cheaply. Ask the office of publication at the New York State College of Agriculture for a copy.

Scoville, Brown & Co. Find Business Good

(From the Wellsville Daily Reporter of October 20)

While the papers are commenting on quiet business conditions, there is considerable doing at Scoville, Brown & Company's. A big car of new pack Heart's Delight Corn and another of Heart's Delight Tomatoes is followed by new pack Berries from the Pacific Coast. A car of Salmon now on track is the fourth carload of Salmon in two weeks. A car of Heart's Delight Sauer Kraut just arrived will be followed in a couple of days by a car of Heart's Delight Pumpkin. Distributing these products all over their territory in addition to their regular business makes things lively with them these days.
